

Many Ways To Mentor

Presented by Ann Rolfe, Mentoring Works

A white sculpture of a hand with fingers spread, set against a blue sky background. The sculpture is made of thick, white, rectangular bars. The thumb is on the left, and the four fingers are spread out to the right. The background is a clear, bright blue sky with some light clouds.

Contemporary mentoring takes many forms and though informal mentoring often occurs naturally and spontaneously, more structured approaches are emerging.

Traditional: expert - novice

Traditional mentoring pairs an expert with a novice. It has overtones of a master-apprentice or patron-protégé relationship. Contemporary mentoring tends to expand old ideas so that participants are more like colleagues or equal partners and benefits are enjoyed by both.

Informal: by chance

Informal mentoring conversations happen by chance with people you meet or people you know. The person may give you useful information, share their experience or just listen while you think out loud. It may be a one-off conversation or a life-long relationship. The word "mentor" may never be used.

Formal: a structured program

Formal mentoring relationships are usually part of a structured program. You may be matched, introduced and supported in developing the mentoring partnership. There could be formal agreements about your roles and responsibilities and a timeframe for the relationship. You'll have goals and work towards outcomes.

Reciprocal: peer to peer

In reciprocal mentoring two colleagues mentor each other. This is very much a two-way street with each able to ask the other for input and advice and each providing a listening ear in a confidential conversation.

Reverse: exec by non-exec

Reverse-mentoring is where an executive is mentored by a non-executive, often a younger person talking to an older person about technology. This can bridge the generation gap when a relationship of trust and understanding is built. Young people who have grown up with social media for example, can convey the value and benefits as well as the practical ways to use it. In such a rapidly changing world, senior people can't afford to be left behind!

Group: one mentor several mentees

Group mentoring involves one mentor meeting with several mentorees. They might have common goals or a common background. For example new graduates in their first workplace, or small business owners.

Mastermind: group of peers

Mastermind - peers interact in a conversation or think-tank. The original concept was described by Napoleon Hill as: “ ... a group of brains, coordinated (or connected) in a spirit of harmony, will provide more thought energy than a single brain, just as a group of electric batteries will provide more energy than a single battery ... The increased energy created by that alliance becomes available to every brain in the group.”

Mentoring Circle

Mentoring circles are a variation of group mentoring that led by one or more mentors that may blend elements of peer mentoring and mastermind groups.

Manager-Mentor

Manager-mentors recognize that leading team learning or one-to-one development is a key role and contributes to employee engagement, retention and productivity.

Mentoring moments:
conversations that create insight

Manager-mentors recognize that leading team learning or one-to-one development is a key role and contributes to employee engagement, retention and productivity.

Ann Rolfe

ann@mentoring-works.com

www.mentoring-works.com

Contact me now, for your invitation to my next complementary webinar,
To subscribe to the Mentoring Works newsletter for information and articles on mentoring,
Or to set up a time to talk about your mentoring program and how I may assist you.